ANNUAL REPORT YEAR 2020- SOS CV KHAJURIKALAN

MANY CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES CONTINUE TO BE SOCIALLY

MARGINALIZED

According to UNICEF, there are around 150 million children with disabilities in the world. The number in developing countries is higher than in developed ones. Although there is a lack of reliable data regarding the number of Indian children with disabilities, some estimates suggest that approximately six to ten per cent of children in India are born with a disability.

Many of these disabilities are preventable if mothers are provided with better prenatal and postnatal medical care, given advice on nutrition and have access to food and safe drinking water. However, early intervention measures are not always available, especially to those living in poverty. Adolescents and young people are at risk of acquiring disabilities due to work-related injuries or risk-taking behaviour. Children with disabilities are vulnerable to exploitation, trafficking or abuse.

In spite of the growing disability rights movement, people with disabilities in India continue to be socially stigmatised. They are more likely to be illiterate and have fewer employment opportunities than the general population.

Sadly, families with a child with disabilities often see him or her as a burden, and this leads to an increased social marginalisation of the child, who is not given the opportunity to live a dignified life. A significant proportion of children with disabilities do not attend school. The rate among children with particular disabilities is extremely high, for example more than 60 per cent of six-to-thirteen-year-olds with multiple disabilities and almost half of those with mental disabilities in the same age group do not attend school. There is limited aid for families to send their child with disabilities to school. Furthermore, schools are not always adapted to the needs of children with disabilities and there are limited technological aids to help them with their learning.

Children with Special Needs

DISABILITY is the consequence of an impairment that may be physical, cognitive, mental, sensory, emotional, and developmental or some combination of these, and it may be present from birth or may occur during a person's lifetime. Children with disabilities are more likely to be abandoned and susceptible to abuse — their vulnerability is far higher than abled children. We work with 470 children (60% girls) across 32 Children's Villages with some form of disability. Intellectual disability is as common as 70% among them. To provide the best care and inclusive environment to all children, we weave in robust capacity building of SOS mothers and coworkers.

A special Village for children with special needs

THE Children's Village of Khajuri Kalan supports 105 children with diverse needs, specifically, children living with Cerebral Palsy, Mental Retardation, Autism and Multiple Disabilities. The SOS Mothers play a crucial role in creating a joyful and nondiscriminatory environment to also nurture their innate talents. The infrastructure is also disability friendly, while efforts are made to engage children in creative and constructive activities, such as farming, painting, yoga and sports. 21 children attend regular school, while 74 children are in vocational training and skill development programme.
